YOUR BUYER'S RATE JUMPED. YOU WENT QUIET.

One Saturday, one bond market swing, and a client who heard about it from someone else first.

ONE BOND MARKET SWING. TWO VERY DIFFERENT BUYERS.

The 30-year fixed buyer barely moved. The ARM buyer's rate jumped three and a half times as hard, same morning.

THE MISTAKE ISN'T MISSING THE MOVE. IT'S STAYING QUIET ABOUT IT.

On Saturday, August 22, the 30-year fixed rose fourteen basis points to 6.64%, and the 5/1 ARM rose forty-nine basis points, "a whopping jump" in the article's own words, to 6.74%. Most agents wait for a buyer to bring up rates. The agent who calls first, especially the buyer sitting in an ARM, is still the one that buyer trusts on Monday.

WHAT CHANGES TODAY:

1 Check the rate sheet before every buyer call.

Not once a week. The morning of the call. A stale number is worse than no number.

2 Flag ARM volatility by name when you present loan options.

An ARM can move three or four times as hard as a fixed rate on the same news day. Say that out loud before a buyer picks one.

3 Text on a real move. Don't wait to be asked.

"Rates jumped this weekend, here's what it means for you" beats a buyer finding out from a headline.

THE TAKEAWAY

BE THE ONE WHO CALLED BEFORE THEY HAD TO ASK.

The rate moves either way. Whether you're the source of that news is the only part you control.
