YOUR DATABASE, YOUR LISTING PHOTOS, AND YOUR CLOSING FILES ALL SIT ON A SYSTEM YOU DON'T OWN.

Almost nobody has ever checked which of it they could take with them.

THE PROBLEM ISN'T THAT YOU'D LOSE IT. IT'S THAT YOU DON'T KNOW.

Whether you could export your contacts, your listing photography, or your closing files if you left your brokerage depends on the firm, the platform, and what your own listing agreement actually says. There's no answer that's true everywhere, and no one claim covers every agent. What is true everywhere: almost nobody has ever checked, because nobody at any firm is assigned to sit an agent down and walk them through it.

THE AUDIT, SO YOU'RE NOT FINDING OUT THE HARD WAY:

1 Your database.
Not just the names, the contact history, notes, and lead source. Names export more often than history does.

2 Your listing photography.
Commissioning it isn't the same as owning the rights to it; the license usually runs to whoever paid the photographer.

3 Your closing files and transaction archive.
The one nobody checks until a complaint lands years later and the login that held it stopped working.

4 The phone number and email on every business card you've handed out.
The one almost every agent who's switched firms names first.

THE TAKEAWAY

FIND OUT WHAT YOU CAN TAKE BEFORE YOU NEED TO, NOT AFTER.

Ask the question now. The time to learn the answer is never during a move.
