32 DEALS A YEAR. NOT NINE.

That's the median gap between an agent on a team and an agent working alone.

MOST AGENTS STILL BUILD THEIR WHOLE BUSINESS ALONE.

The production numbers say that's the harder way to do this job, not the safer one.

THE GAP ISN'T LEADS. IT'S STRUCTURE.

The typical individual agent closed nine transaction sides last year. The typical agent working on a team closed 32, with team-based specialists reporting a median sales volume of $17.5 million against $2.7 million for agents flying solo. Same license, same market, same leads available. The difference is that one agent is doing every job in the transaction alone, and the other one isn't.

BEFORE YOU DECIDE SOLO IS THE SAFER PATH, CHECK:

- 1 What you're actually doing alone.
Lead follow-up, showings, contracts, marketing, and
- 2 closing coordination, all on one calendar.
- 3 What a team splits across more than one person.
The 21% of Realtors on a team report a
- 4 median of four people sharing that same list.
- 5 What nine sides a year is actually worth you giving up.
Not the split. The 23 extra deals
- 6 the median team agent closed instead.

THE TAKEAWAY

SOLO ISN'T THE SAFE CHOICE. IT'S THE HARD ONE.

Look at what a team actually splits before you decide you'd rather keep it all.
