INSIDE THE INDUSTRY

2 IN 3 SELLERS COVER THIS COST.

Most net sheets never show it coming.

YOUR SELLER'S NET SHEET IS PROBABLY MISSING A LINE.

Buyer closing costs. Most sellers end up covering some or all of them anyway.

TWO-THIRDS OF SELLERS PAY IT. ALMOST NO NET SHEET SHOWS IT.

Zillow's 2025 Consumer Housing Trends Report for Agents found that about two-thirds of sellers covered some or all of the buyer's closing costs. Most listing presentations quote one number: the sale price minus commission. The seller plans around that number, then finds out at the table that a chunk of it just went to the buyer's side instead.

WHAT TO ADD BEFORE THE SIGN GOES IN THE YARD:

1 Put a buyer-closing-cost line on every net sheet.
Show it before the seller asks why the check is smaller than they expected.

2 Run the estimate two ways.
One if the buyer asks for nothing, one if you cover part of their closing costs. Plan on the second number.

3 Say it out loud at the listing meeting.
"Here's what you walk away with either way. Plan on the smaller one."

THE TAKEAWAY

SHOW THEM THE SMALLER CHECK FIRST.

The number on the net sheet should already be the number they get at the table.
