

KALE REALTY

YOUR LISTING JUST LOST A SHOWING.

Not to a better house. To the one next door a buyer's agent could book in thirty seconds.

“

CALL-TO-SHOW IS A SILENT REJECTION.

A listing with no lockbox doesn't turn buyers away. It just makes them skip you for the house they could actually get into.

THE SELLER WILL NEVER KNOW IT HAPPENED.

A buyer's agent working a tight schedule books what she can get into and moves on from what she can't. She never calls to complain. She never tells the seller she skipped the house. The listing just quietly stops getting shown, and it looks exactly like low demand instead of what it actually is: a scheduling wall the seller never agreed to put up.

TONIGHT, BEFORE YOUR NEXT LISTING APPOINTMENT:

- 1 Put a lockbox on every listing you can.
Call-to-show should be the exception you fight for, not the default you fall into.
- 2 Book a showing on your own listing and time it.
If it takes you more than thirty seconds, it's taking a buyer's agent the same.
- 3 If a seller insists on call-to-show, set a callback window in writing.
"Fifteen minutes or we lose the appointment" beats an unanswered phone.
- 4 Tell the seller what call-to-show actually costs.
Not fewer showings on paper. Fewer showings that never make it onto the calendar at all.

THE TAKEAWAY

MAKE IT EASY TO SAY YES.

The buyer's agent with eight houses to see picks the ones she can get into first.
