

KEEPING IT REAL

100 FIVE-STAR REVIEWS. GOOGLE THINKS YOU'RE DEAD.

The algorithm runs on a recency clock, not a lifetime count.

D.J. Paris
Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com

“

NO NEW REVIEW
SINCE DECEMBER.
THAT'S WHAT GOOGLE ACTUALLY READS.

It does not matter how many five-star reviews already sit on the page.

BOBBY KERR CALLS THIS THE DARK HOUSE REALTOR.

Bobby Kerr, founder of the Google Business Profile agency Locate, has optimized more than a thousand REALTOR profiles. His read on the algorithm: "There's a massive recency bias." Google puts every business profile on roughly a thirty-to-forty-five-day clock. Stop posting and stop collecting new reviews, and it reads the business as dormant, no matter how many five-star reviews already sit on the page from years back. Once that happens, Google stops recommending the profile in search and in the AI overviews that now pull directly from it. Kerr's own name for the pattern, from his coaching: the dark house REALTOR, an agent with the best listing in the world where every showing happens with the lights off. Nobody stops in, because nobody can see it's occupied.

TURN THE LIGHTS BACK ON THIS WEEK:

- 1 Post to your profile every two to three days, minimum twice a week.
That cadence is the recency signal that keeps you out of the "dormant business" bucket.
- 2 Put a QR code review block at the closing table.
A printed card or coaster with your direct Google review link, handed over when they're holding the keys, not buried in a post-closing email.
- 3 Coach the review before they write it.
Ask them to mention you by name, the neighborhood, and the problem you solved. Those are the details Google's AI overviews actually read.

THE TAKEAWAY

A HUNDRED OLD
REVIEWS IS A DARK
HOUSE. TURN THE LIGHTS BACK ON.

The reviews you already earned don't expire. The silence since the last one does.

D.J. Paris
Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com