COMMENT BELOW IS COSTING YOU REACH.

Meta classifies it as engagement bait and quietly demotes the post. Here's the swap.

THAT LINE AT THE
END OF YOUR CAPTION IS THROTTLING THE
POST IT'S SITTING ON.

Meta has classified it as engagement bait since December 2017. The policy is still enforced.

THE ASK DOESN'T BUILD REACH. IT SUPPRESSES IT.

Meta's Transparency Center defines engagement bait as a post that explicitly requests comments, shares, tags, or likes for no reason other than the engagement itself, and says accounts using the tactic should expect reach to drop, with bigger drops for repeat use. Most agents keep asking anyway, because a comment count is the easiest number to put on a coaching slide. Nobody has to prove what that comment was actually worth.

WHAT CHANGES IN YOUR NEXT THREE POSTS:

- 1 Delete "comment below," "tag a friend," and "double tap if."

Every version of the ask trips the same policy.

- 2 Replace it with one sentence you'd actually send another agent.

Not a request. A line worth forwarding on its own.

- 3 Watch sends and saves for two weeks, not comments.

That's the number the swap is actually built to move.

THE TAKEAWAY

YOU DIDN'T LOSE THE COMMENT BY NOT ASKING.

You were losing the post by asking.
