

KEEPING IT REAL

A $150M YOUTUBE AGENT BROKE HER OWN RULE.

Sarah Maslowski missed a week of posting. Here's the system she's rebuilding right now.

D.J. Paris
Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com

“

"I TEACH THE STUFF, I SPEAK ABOUT IT ON STAGES AND I STILL
LET IT HAPPEN TO ME."

One missed week broke months of consistency on a channel that's closed over $150 million in real estate.

ONE EDITOR. ZERO BACKUP. ONE FAMILY EMERGENCY.

Sarah Maslowski has closed over $150 million in real estate from YouTube, with no paid ads and no cold calling. Then her video editor had a family emergency the same week she had no video bank and no backup editor lined up. "I had nothing in the bank, no backup video, no buffer to speak of," she said on Keeping It Real. The channel that runs through one person is one emergency away from going dark, and the algorithm remembers the gap even after it's fixed.

THE FIX SHE'S PUTTING IN PLACE:

- 1 Build a video bank of two to three fully edited videos.
Ready to post before you need them. That's the buffer that makes a bad week invisible to your audience.
- 2 Name a backup editor before you need one.
Someone already briefed on your style who can step in the day your regular editor can't.
- 3 Separate your planning week from your filming week.
Research and scripting pull a different kind of energy than filming. Doing both the same day burns out both.

THE TAKEAWAY

DISCIPLINE OUTLASTS MOTIVATION, EVEN FOR A $150M AGENT.

Her word for it: the channels that survive the messy parts of life are the ones running on a system, not on how she feels that week.

D.J. Paris

Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com