

KALE REALTY

YOUR SELLER WANTS TO WAIT FOR RATES. DON'T.

The exact response that keeps the listing moving instead of stalling for a rate cut that may not come.

“

WAITING FOR RATES COSTS
MORE THAN IT SAVES.

A lower payment on a listing with three more competitors rarely beats the number available today.

THE SELLER ISN'T CHOOSING "NOW" VERSUS "LATER." THEY'RE CHOOSING THIS COMPETITION VERSUS THE NEXT ONE.

A rate drop lowers a buyer's payment, but it also brings the sellers who were waiting for the same thing back onto the market at the same time. More listings competing for the same pool of buyers tends to mean more competition for that seller's home, not less. "Let's wait for rates" sounds like patience. It's actually a bet that fewer people will be selling six months from now, and that bet usually loses.

THE EXACT RESPONSE:

- 1 Acknowledge it first.
"That's a fair thing to think about, and I want to walk through what actually happens if rates drop."
- 2 Name the competition that comes back with it.
"A lower rate brings other sellers off the fence too. You'd be selling into more competition, not less."
- 3 Anchor to what you both control today.
"The price and the terms are the two things we can set right now. The rate is the one thing neither of us controls."

THE TAKEAWAY

SELL INTO TODAY'S COMPETITION, NOT NEXT SEASON'S.

The rate might drop. So might the number of buyers willing to pay what this listing is worth right now.
