

KALE REALTY

63 PERCENT. HIGHEST IN 15 YEARS.

That's the share of 2025's investor home purchases made by someone who bought fewer than 10 properties, not a hedge fund.

“

YOUR BUYER KEEPS LOSING
ENTRY-LEVEL
HOMES TO AN
"INVESTOR." IT'S NOT WHO THEY THINK.

It's not a fund with a spreadsheet. It's someone who bought one house this year and wrote a stronger offer.

THE COMPETITOR AT THE ENTRY PRICE POINT ISN'T INSTITUTIONAL.

In 2025, small investors, people buying fewer than 10 properties a year, made up 63 percent of all investor home purchases, the highest share in at least 15 years. Mega investors, the kind buying 350 or more homes a year, made up just 7.5 percent, down 70 percent from their pandemic peak. The small investors aren't chasing luxury either: their median purchase price was $330,000, well under the $440,000 overall market median. (Realtor.com, released 2026-06-23, senior economist Hannah Jones.)

WHAT THAT CHANGES FOR THE ENTRY-LEVEL BUYER CONVERSATION:

1 Prep buyers for a local competitor, not a corporate one.

The bidder outpacing them at $330,000 is more often one person with a rental property than a fund with an algorithm.

2 Ask the listing agent who else has called.

A seller fielding small-investor interest at the entry price has real information your buyer needs before writing the offer.

3 Explain the number, not just the market.

An agent who can say why the $330,000 band is competitive earns more trust than one who just says it's a tough market.

THE TAKEAWAY

THE COMPETITION
AT THE ENTRY
PRICE POINT HAS A
NAME. IT ISN'T
WALL STREET.