YOU'VE GONE QUIET ON THE FILE CLOSING THIS WEEK.

The highest-anxiety week of the whole transaction is exactly the week most agents go silent. Here's why that happens, and the fix.

YOUR BUYER IS ABOUT TO WIRE
THEIR LIFE
SAVINGS, AND
YOU'VE STOPPED
TEXTING.

Nothing dramatic is happening in closing week, so it feels like there's nothing to report. The buyer doesn't read silence that way. They read it as the deal falling apart.

BUYERS ARE WALKING INTO CLOSING WEEK ALREADY WORN DOWN.

The typical home that went under contract this year took 64 days to get there, the longest stretch in six years, per Redfin's February 2026 housing market report. That's 64 days of looking, losing out on other homes, and waiting, before a buyer even reaches the anxious final week: wiring their savings, waiting on a lender's last document, hoping the walkthrough goes clean. An agent who goes quiet at exactly that moment isn't sparing the client a check-in. They're removing the one thing that was holding the buyer's nerve together.

WHAT TO DO IN THE SEVEN DAYS BEFORE EVERY CLOSING:

- 1 Send a daily one-liner, even when nothing moved.
"Tues update: lender has everything,
- 2 waiting on clear-to-close, expect Thursday, walkthrough locked Friday 4pm. Nothing needed
- 3 from you." Thirty seconds, and the client stops refreshing their email at midnight.
- 4 Confirm the walkthrough time in writing the moment it's set.
Not the week before. The
- 5 moment the time exists, send it.
- 6 Verify wire instructions by phone, never by email.
Say why out loud: wire fraud targets
- 7 exactly this week, and a client who knows that will double check instead of panic.

THE TAKEAWAY

PICK YOUR NEXT
CLOSING INSIDE
SEVEN DAYS AND
SEND TODAY'S UPDATE NOW, EVEN THOUGH NOTHING HAPPENED.

Silence is the one part of closing week you control completely.
