STOP TELLING CLIENTS A CRASH IS COMING.

The 2026 foreclosure crisis everyone predicted never showed up in the numbers.

NEW FORECLOSURE-RELAT LISTINGS THIS YEAR RAN AT 54,478 A WEEK. IN 2009 IT WAS 280,400.

That is not what the start of a credit crisis looks like.

THE 2008 COMPARISON DOESN'T HOLD UP TO THE NUMBERS.

HousingWire tracked the same week of new foreclosure-related listings every year: 280,400 in 2009, 353,457 in 2010, 352,030 in 2011, and 54,478 in 2026. Loan-to-value ratios that reached nearly 86% in 2011 now sit at 44.2%. Mortgage delinquency is sitting inside the 1% to 4% range that is always present, crisis or not. The FHA foreclosure moratorium ended in October 2025, and foreclosures take 9 to 18 months to turn into new listings, so even that doesn't explain a wave that isn't in the data yet.

WHAT TO DO WITH THAT THIS MONTH:

1 Answer "is a crash coming" with the real numbers, not the headline.

Keep the 2009-2011-versus-2026 listings comparison ready to pull up on your phone.

2 Tell a nervous seller the moratorium ending isn't the same as a wave of distressed listings.

Foreclosures take 9 to 18 months to turn into new supply.

3 Stop saying "it's just like 2008" to a buyer on the fence.

It costs you a decision today for a comparison the loan-to-value and delinquency numbers don't support.

THE TAKEAWAY

HERE'S THE FIX.

Next time a client brings up a crash, show them the real numbers instead of the headline. Panic isn't a strategy. Data is.
