

KEEPING IT REAL

STOP AUTOMATING YOUR PAST CLIENT FOLLOW-UP.

A $3.5 billion luxury agent does this instead.

"STAYING IN TOUCH WITH CLIENTS THROUGH PERSONALIZED COMMUNICATION IS MORE EFFECTIVE THAN AUTOMATION."

Carrie McCormick, $3.5 billion in lifetime Chicago sales, on the Keeping It Real Podcast.

WE NEVER KNOW WHEN A CLIENT DECIDES. WE CONTROL WHETHER WE'RE THERE WHEN THEY DO.

Most agents' past-client touch is automated: a drip email, a holiday card that's digitally signed. It feels like contact. It isn't memorable, because nobody made it. Carrie McCormick says she's stayed away from automated touchpoints on purpose and instead calls, sends newsletters, and stays visible on social media. Her own words on why: "we never know when our clients are going to make a decision, but when they do, we want to be right there for them."

WHAT SHE DOES INSTEAD OF THE DRIP:

1 Stop the auto-email.
A digitally signed card or an automated "thinking of you" note reads like everyone else's, because it is.

2 Call instead of letting an app send something.
She picks up the phone with past clients rather than relying on an automated touch sequence.

3 Post consistently, so they keep seeing you.
Clients who scroll but never comment are still watching. Showing up in the feed repeatedly keeps you top of mind without asking them for anything.

4 Be the easiest person to reach when they decide.
You don't control the timing. You control whether you're reachable the moment it happens.

THE TAKEAWAY

PICK THREE PAST CLIENTS TODAY. CALL THEM. DON'T LET AN APP DO IT FOR YOU.

Being first never won the client. Being reachable when they decided did.
