

D.J. PARIS

42.5 PERCENT OF LISTINGS JUST CUT PRICE.

Up from 41.5 percent the same week last year. The comp you priced against is already stale.

“

ALMOST HALF THE ACTIVE MARKET
HAS ALREADY
LOWERED ITS PRICE
THIS MONTH.

Most listing conversations still run on comps that were fresh when the sign went in the yard, not this week.

THE HABIT OF PRICING ONCE AND WAITING IS THE PROBLEM, NOT THE AGENT.

Nationally, 42.5 percent of active listings took a price cut in the week HousingWire tracked, up from 41.5 percent the same week a year ago, while purchase applications ran 11 percent below last year. That is not a crash. It is a market that reprices faster than a single comp pull at the listing appointment can keep up with. An agent who sets the number once at intake and checks back only when the seller calls asking why nothing happened is working from a snapshot the market has already moved past.

WHAT CHANGES THIS MONTH, BEFORE THE NEXT LISTING APPOINTMENT:

- 1 Pull sold comps from the trailing 30 days, not 90.
A comp from three months ago was priced in a different week's rate environment.
- 2 Re-check comps every two weeks a listing sits active.
Tell the seller what changed in the neighborhood, not just that nothing sold.
- 3 Say the comp's age out loud before you say the number.
"The closest sale is 41 days old" earns more trust than a number with no date attached.
- 4 Bring the seller the local price-cut rate, not the national one.
42.5 percent nationally does not price a specific block. Their own zip code does.

THE TAKEAWAY

REPRICE WITH THIS WEEK'S COMPS,
NOT THE COMPS
FROM THE LISTING APPOINTMENT.
