

KALE REALTY

CUTTING PRICE LATE COSTS TWELVE TIMES MORE.

And it isn't the market doing it. Denver's Q2 data, and the one line that keeps the cut cheap.

“

A DENVER PRICE
CUT IN WEEK TWO
AVERAGED $2,321.
IN WEEK EIGHT:
$28,278.

Same listing, same market, six weeks apart. The report calls it more than a 12-times increase.

THE GAP ISN'T THE MARKET MOVING.

REcolorado's Q2 2026 analysis of closed Denver-metro listings found cuts taken between day eight and fourteen averaged $2,321. Cuts taken between day fifty and fifty-six averaged $28,278, more than twelve times as much. Nobody decides on day fifty to give up twenty-six thousand dollars. Showings go quiet in week two, nobody wants to be the agent who brings up price already, so the listing gets one more week. Then another.

BEFORE YOU TAKE THE NEXT LISTING:

- 1 Put a price-review date in the listing agreement on day one.
Not after it's been sitting.
- 2 Set the checkpoint at day fourteen.
That's the window Denver's data shows before a cut
- 3 gets expensive.
- 4 Tell the seller the number moves if there's no offer by then
, in writing, while the
- 5 correction is still small.

THE TAKEAWAY

YOU'RE NOT DECIDING WHETHER TO CUT.

You're deciding what it costs, and when.
