

KEEPING IT REAL

YOUR FIVE-STAR REVIEWS MIGHT PROVE NOTHING TO GOOGLE.

A guy who's optimized 1,000+ agent profiles on what actually counts.

D.J. Paris
Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com

“

"IT MATTERS TO
GOOGLE WHAT'S IN
THE REVIEW. IT MATTERS TO THE
LLMS WHAT'S IN THE REVIEW."

Bobby Kerr, founder of a Google Business Profile agency that's optimized over 1,000 real estate agents.

GOOGLE DOESN'T COUNT THE STARS. IT READS THE WORDS.

On Keeping It Real, Bobby Kerr explained why "great experience, loved working with them" does nothing for an agent's visibility: it doesn't prove to Google or the AI models citing local businesses that a real person had a real transaction. Bobby also flagged the pattern Google actively suppresses on the content side: "Google is quite literally suppressing those types of profiles because they say I don't need to promote 10,000 mirrors of 10,000 other agents." Same principle both places. Generic gets buried. Specific gets shown.

WHAT BOBBY TELLS CLIENTS TO INCLUDE, EVERY TIME:

- 1 The business name, exactly as it appears on your profile.

"DJ was great" doesn't do it if your profile name is Kale Realty. Both need to show up.
- 2 A real address anchor: city, state, and the neighborhood or street.

Real estate makes this the easiest ask in any industry, the transaction already happened at a specific address.
- 3 One specific, provable result.

"Sold in 5 days, above asking" beats "highly recommend" because it reads as something only a real client could know.

THE TAKEAWAY

STOP ASKING FOR FIVE STARS.

Ask for the name, the neighborhood, and the number.

D.J. Paris
Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com