

KEEPING IT REAL

YOUR GOOGLE LISTING MIGHT NOT MATCH YOUR LICENSE.

One name mismatch can bury you in local search.

D.J. Paris
Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com

“

MOST AGENTS'
GOOGLE BUSINESS
PROFILE DOESN'T
MATCH THE NAME
ON THEIR REAL ESTATE LICENSE.

A Los Angeles agent fixed that one mismatch, and his profile started showing up in the searches that actually matter.

GOOGLE RANKS THE NAME ON FILE. NOT THE NAME ON YOUR BUSINESS CARD.

Alex Maldonado, a REALTOR at Circle Real Estate in Los Angeles, told D.J. on Keeping It Real that most agents lose local search visibility over one fixable detail: their Google Business Profile name, address, and phone number don't exactly match their state license. Google treats a mismatch as a weaker, less trustworthy listing and ranks it lower. Maldonado also keeps his specialty written directly into the profile's title and category, not buried in a bio paragraph, so the exact words a buyer searches are already on the page.

FIX YOUR PROFILE THIS WEEK:

1 Pull up your state license.

Compare it to your Google Business Profile name, character for character. No nicknames, no "Team," no extra words either side adds on its own.

2 Put your specialty in the title, not the bio.

"First-time buyer specialist, [your city]" belongs in the business category or services field, where Google reads it, not in a paragraph nobody opens.

3 Match your name, address, and phone everywhere.

Same spelling and the same suite number on your website, your brokerage page, and every social profile. One mismatch and Google treats you as a different business.

4 Recheck it every quarter.

A team change or a new office address breaks the match again, and the profile never flags it for you.

THE TAKEAWAY

OPEN YOUR GOOGLE BUSINESS
PROFILE TONIGHT.
CHECK THE NAME AGAINST YOUR LICENSE.

It costs nothing and it's the reason half of local search results never see you.