ARE "WAITING FOR RATES TO COME
DOWN" JUST GOT THEIR ANSWER.

Freddie Mac's October 8 average hit the highest point since November 2023.

SEVEN STRAIGHT WEEKS UP. NOT A BLIP.

Rates have climbed for seven consecutive weeks since the Fed's September quarter-point hike, its first increase in three years. A buyer who has been waiting for a drop is six months further into a trend that's moving the opposite direction. The move this week isn't to promise them it will turn around. It's to run the actual math with them now, so they decide on real numbers instead of a guess.

WHAT YOU DO WITH EVERY "WAITING FOR RATES" BUYER THIS WEEK:

- 1 Pull their real numbers today.
Run the payment at 7.40 percent on the house they liked
- 2 three months ago, side by side with what it would have cost them then.
- 3 Say the trend out loud.
Tell them rates have risen seven straight weeks since the Fed's
- 4 hike, not dropped once. Waiting has been a bet, and it hasn't paid off yet.
- 5 Price the wait, not just the house.
Show them what another six months of this trend costs
- 6 if it continues, against what locking in now protects.
- 7 Ask them to decide on the numbers, not the guess.
"Are you deciding based on what's in
- 8 front of you, or on what you're hoping happens next?"
