YOUR BUYER
WAITING FOR RATES TO DROP
JUST LOST THAT BET.

The 30-year fixed hit 6.89 percent, the highest level since June 2025.

THE FED'S OWN VOTE IS WHAT PUSHED RATES UP, NOT DOWN.

The 30-year fixed mortgage rate climbed to 6.89 percent on September 1, 2026, the highest level since June 2025, according to RealEstateNews.com. Iranian airstrikes and retaliatory strikes near the Strait of Hormuz pushed oil prices higher and sent Treasury yields up with them, and a Fed governor said the central bank should act decisively if inflation keeps trending upward. The Fed's own rate-setting meeting is September 15 and 16, and CME Group's FedWatch tool puts the odds of a quarter-point hike at 68.2 percent. A buyer waiting on the Fed to lower rates is watching the wrong meeting for the wrong outcome.

WHAT TO TELL A BUYER WAITING ON RATES THIS WEEK:

- 1 Don't tell a waiting buyer rates might come down soon.
The Fed's own meeting this month is pricing in a hike, not a cut.
- 2 Do show them the 68.2 percent figure directly.
A real probability from CME's FedWatch tool lands harder than an opinion about the market.
- 3 Do put a decision deadline in writing before September 15.
A specific date moves a stalled buyer faster than a general warning.

THE TAKEAWAY

WAITING FOR RATES TO DROP IS A BET AGAINST THE FED'S OWN SIGNAL.

Move your buyer before September 15, not after.
