

KEEPING IT REAL

BUSY ISN'T BUILDING YOUR BUSINESS.

A brokerage owner running $200 million a year says most agents don't have a marketing problem. They have a time problem.

D.J. Paris
Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com

“

MORE HUSTLE WON'T FIX THIS.

A Chicago agent was already on two boards, volunteering at the state level, and training for his first Ironman. A coach who has spent 25,000 hours studying top producers told him none of that was the problem.

IT COMES DOWN TO TWO THINGS.

On the Keeping It Real Podcast, Michael Opyd, a REALTOR mental performance strategist with over 20 years in real estate and 10 of those as a brokerage owner running more than $200 million a year, coached Chicago agent David Farrell live. Farrell was already producing, on track to close five million dollars that year, but stuck juggling two boards, volunteer committees, and Ironman training.

Opyd's read: "It's going to come down to two things: time and money. It always does." If an agent won't spend more money on the business, the only lever left is time, and that means giving something up, not adding one more system on top of an already full week.

RUN THIS BEFORE YOU ADD ONE MORE SYSTEM:

1 Name one commitment that isn't real estate or family.

A board seat, a committee, a training block. Something real, not a rounding error.

2 Look three to five years out, not just this quarter.

Opyd's method with Farrell: if this year repeats exactly, where does that actually leave you?

3 Trade that one commitment for the block your follow-up keeps missing.

Same day, same time, every week.

4 Protect that block like a client's closing.

A stalled business isn't short on tactics. It's short on time.

THE TAKEAWAY

YOU DON'T NEED A NEW SYSTEM. YOU NEED AN HOUR BACK.

"The only way to scale is to find the ways to use more of your day." Michael Opyd, on the Keeping It Real Podcast.

D.J. Paris
Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com