

KALE REALTY

THE HIGH PRICE DIDN'T WIN THE LISTING.

Realtor.com's own 2026 data says what a slow-selling listing actually costs a seller at closing.

“

EVERY EXTRA WEEK ON THE
MARKET COSTS
REAL MONEY.

A listing that closes in about a month sells above the norm. A listing still sitting after four months sells below it. Same house, same asking price, only the calendar changed.

THE GAP IS MORE THAN THREE POINTS.

Realtor.com's own research, released June 2026 by senior economist Joel Berner, found homes that close around the four-week mark sell 1.8 percent above the norm relative to their asking price. Homes still sitting on the market at eighteen weeks close 1.3 percent below it.

That is a gap of more than three percentage points between a home that sells fast and one that doesn't, on the same asking price. The agent who quotes the highest number to win the listing isn't doing the seller a favor. They're setting up the slow sale that costs the seller the difference.

PROTECT THE SELLER FROM THIS BEFORE YOU SIGN:

- 1 Price to the comps, not to the competition for the listing.

A number no other agent will match isn't a strategy. It's a discount, paid later.
- 2 Show the seller the actual math.

A home that sells in four weeks nets more than one still sitting at eighteen. Put both numbers in front of them before they pick an agent.
- 3 Put the price-cut schedule in writing on day one.

If the seller wants to test a high number, agree now on when and how much it drops.
- 4 Track your own listings' days on market.

The gap shows up in your own numbers, not just Realtor.com's.

THE TAKEAWAY

FAST AND PRICED RIGHT BEATS HIGH AND HOPING.

One sourced number, one seller conversation,
before you sign the next listing agreement.