THAT POLITE LINE YOU SAY TO EVERY HOMEOWNER IS COSTING THEM THE WINDOW.

Realtor.com: most recent sellers say they waited too long to start.

WAITING FOR THE CALL MEANS WAITING TOO LONG.

Realtor.com's September 2025 report on seller timing found nearly eight in ten recent sellers wish they had listed sooner. "Call me when you're ready" sounds respectful, but it hands the clock to someone who, by the report's own numbers, is statistically likely to wait past the right window. The agent who books the walk-through the same week a homeowner first brings it up is working with the same information, used differently.

WHAT TO DO THE NEXT TIME A HOMEOWNER SAYS "I'M THINKING ABOUT SELLING":

1 Book the walk-through this week, not when they call back.
The conversation is the trigger, not a future "I'm ready."

2 Set a list date together, on the spot.
A date on the calendar is a plan. "Whenever you're ready" is not.

3 Hand them dated steps working backward from that date.
Repairs, photos, and listing, each with its own month.

THE TAKEAWAY

START THE PLAN NOW, NOT WHEN THEY CALL.

The agent with a dated plan beats the agent who's still waiting by the phone.
