

KEEPING IT REAL

SHE NEVER FILMS THE WEEK SHE POSTS.

The two-week cycle behind a $150M YouTube channel that's never gone dark.

D.J. Paris
Keeping It Real Podcast

KEEPING IT REAL

keepingitrealpod.com

“

"CONTENT PLANNING AND CONTENT
FILMING ARE TWO COMPLETELY DIFFERENT MENTAL TASKS, AND THEY SHOULD NEVER HAPPEN ON THE SAME DAY."

Sarah Maslowski runs a two-week cycle so neither one ever has to compete with the other.

ONE WEEK TO PLAN. ONE WEEK TO FILM. NEVER THE SAME WEEK.

Sarah Maslowski has closed over $150 million in real estate from YouTube alone. Her rhythm: week one is content planning only, one hour per video, pulling from a four-bucket topic rotation so she never starts from a blank page. Week two is filming only, two videos batched in one sitting. "My personal target is always be two weeks ahead," she said on Keeping It Real, "and that means the video posting this week was filmed and edited at least two weeks ago." The cycle repeats every two weeks, and the buffer it builds is the whole point.

HER TWO-WEEK CYCLE, START TO FINISH:

- 1 Give planning its own week.
One hour per video, pulling the topic from a four-bucket rotation so you're never guessing what to make.
- 2 Give filming its own week.
Batch two videos in one sitting instead of one video a day. It protects your energy on video two.
- 3 Hand your editor one self-contained folder.
Raw footage, full script, and B-roll shortcuts together, so there's no back-and-forth and no hunting.
- 4 Post from two weeks out.
If this week's post was filmed and edited two weeks ago, one bad week can't take your channel dark.

THE TAKEAWAY

THE BUFFER ISN'T A NICE-TO-HAVE.
IT'S THE WHOLE SYSTEM.

Two weeks ahead means one emergency is a Tuesday, not a missed post.