THE WRONG SENTENCE FOR A DAY-30 PRICE CUT.

Most agents open the call wrong. Here's the line that keeps the seller calm.

YOUR LISTING HITS DAY THIRTY THIS WEEK, WHETHER YOU CALL OR NOT.

Most agents open that call with the exact sentence that makes it worse.

Realtor.com's June 2026 data: homes that close around the four-week mark sell 1.8 percent better against asking than the average sale in the same period. Listings still sitting at eighteen weeks close below average. It isn't the market deciding that. It's whether the price conversation happens on week four or week eighteen.

THE SWAP FOR THE DAY-30 CALL:

- 1 Don't say "we need to talk about the price."
Your seller hears you quitting, and starts defending a number.
- 2 Say this instead.
"Realtor.com ran the numbers. Homes that close at four weeks do 1.8 percent better against asking than average. At eighteen weeks, worse. We're at week four. I'd rather move while we still pick the number."
- 3 Find your listing closest to day thirty and make that call today.
The deadline works because nobody has to be wrong.

THE TAKEAWAY

DAY THIRTY ISN'T
WHEN YOU LOSE
THE LISTING. IT'S THE LAST WEEK
YOU GET TO CHOOSE.

Put a deadline in the room instead of an opinion.
