THE LISTINGS ALMOST NOBODY CALLS BACK.

44 percent relist with someone. Here's the call that wins them.

“

AN EXPIRED
LISTING ISN'T A
DEAD LEAD. IT'S A
SELLER WHO JUST WATCHED THEIR AGENT FAIL.

Somebody still gets that listing. It's rarely the agent who calls last.

Forty-four percent of expired listings come back on the market, and in peak summer expiration season almost nobody calls those sellers. Calling a seller whose home just failed feels like walking into their bad day, which is exactly why the competition won't dial. That discomfort is the whole opening.

WHAT TO DO INSTEAD OF SKIPPING THE CALL:

- 1 Don't skip the call because it feels awkward.
That discomfort is exactly why your competition won't dial either.
- 2 Call within the hour, and don't pitch.
Say this: "I'm not calling to relist your home today. I'm calling to find out what went wrong, because if nobody names it, the next agent just repeats it."
- 3 Lead with the diagnosis, not the sale.
Now you're the diagnostician, not the vulture, the one person who called to help instead of to sell.
- 4 Pull this week's expireds and call the first five today.

THE TAKEAWAY

THE AGENT WHO CALLS FIRST, CALM
AND USEFUL,
USUALLY GETS THE RELIST.

That's your edge right now.
