

D.J. PARIS

17 DAYS. OR 66. YOU PICK.

That's the gap between a right-priced listing and the market's current median.

“

A LISTING GETS ABOUT ONE WEEK
OF REAL BUYER ATTENTION.

Waste that week on an ambitious number, and you spend the next two months chasing it down.

WEEK ONE IS THE ONLY PEAK ATTENTION YOU GET FOR FREE.

A right-priced home still goes pending in about 17 days. The median active listing right now sits at 66. More than one in three listings on the market has already cut price at least once, which means all of them started too high and chased the market down from there. Overpricing by even three to five percent burns the one week buyers see the listing fresh.

BEFORE YOUR NEXT LISTING APPOINTMENT:

- 1 Pull every price cut in the seller's zip code.
How many, and how long each one sat before it was cut.
- 2 Bring the data instead of your opinion.
The 17-day number and the 66-day number say more than a hunch.
- 3 Name the cost of the first two weeks out loud.
A listing that misses its peak week doesn't get a second one. It gets a price cut instead.

THE TAKEAWAY

PRICE IT FOR WEEK ONE, OR BEG FOR THE REST OF THE SEASON.

The data is the argument. You don't have to be.
