

KALE REALTY

STOP LETTING A SELLER TEST A HIGH PRICE.

"Let's start high and see" is the most expensive sentence in a listing appointment.

“

EVERY DAY A HOME
SITS OVERPRICED,
BUYERS ASSUME SOMETHING IS WRONG WITH IT.

By the time the price comes down, the buyers who would have paid full price already bought somewhere else.

MOST AGENTS AGREE TO LIST HIGH. TOP AGENTS SHOW THE MATH INSTEAD.

A listing priced above the comps doesn't get a chance to prove itself; it just sits. Then the price cut reads as a red flag instead of a correction, because buyers who watched it sit already assume the seller is difficult or the house has a problem. The agents who avoid that outcome don't argue with the seller about the number. They just show the math before anyone agrees to one.

THE SWAP, THREE CONVERSATIONS:

- 1 Don't say "let's start high and see."
Say "the first two weeks get more eyes than this listing will ever see again. Let's price it to win that window."
- 2 Don't agree to a number with no comps behind it.
Pull the three closest sold comparables and show the seller the range before you agree to a list price.
- 3 Don't wait for the seller to ask for a price cut.
Set a 14-day check-in on the calendar the day you sign the listing, so the pricing conversation happens on your terms.

THE TAKEAWAY

PRICE IT TO WIN
THE FIRST TWO WEEKS, NOT TO
PLEASE THE SELLER
TODAY.

The showings you get in week one are the offers you'll be comparing in week four.
