

D.J. PARIS

THE $26,000 MISTAKE MOST LISTING AGENTS MAKE.

It happens one week at a time. Here's the date that stops it before it starts.

“

NOBODY DECIDES ON DAY FIFTY TO GIVE UP
TWENTY-SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS.

It happens one week at a time, and the fix costs nothing.

Denver's Q2 2026 data: listings that cut price between day eight and day fourteen averaged a $2,321 reduction. Listings that waited until day fifty to fifty-six averaged $28,278, more than twelve times as much, the report's own characterization. Nationally, active inventory has held above 1.1 million for seven straight weeks, so buyers have somewhere else to go. It isn't the market moving. It's six weeks of nobody wanting to be the one who brings up price.

FOUR THINGS TO DO INSTEAD OF WAITING:

1 Put a price-review date in the listing agreement on day one.

No offer by day fourteen, the number moves. Agreed while it's still cheap to be right.

2 Track showings, not weeks.

Thin showings by day fourteen is the signal that matters, not a feeling that it's still early.

3 Say the quiet part at the appointment, not at day fifty.

"I'll tell you before it gets expensive to fix" is easier to hear on day one than on day fifty.

4 Watch inventory, not just the listing.

Active inventory has held above 1.1 million for seven straight weeks. The window for an easy correction is tighter than it was a year ago.

THE TAKEAWAY

PUT THE DATE IN THE AGREEMENT
ON DAY ONE,
WHILE THE CORRECTION IS STILL CHEAP.

You're not deciding whether to cut. You're deciding what it costs.
