NAR'S NEWEST SURVEY FOUND MOST AGENTS ARE LOSING THEIR OWN PAST CLIENTS.

88% of buyers said they would use their agent again. Only 24% of repeat buyers actually did.

IT ISN'T A LOYALTY PROBLEM.

A separate Zillow survey from December 2025 found almost the same gap: 79% said they would consider their past agent again, only 13% actually hired them. Zillow's Amanda Pendleton frames it plainly: agents who stay visible, communicate clearly, and show their expertise early are the ones who get asked back. The client didn't leave. The agent went quiet first.

WHAT TO DO INSTEAD OF DISAPPEARING:

1 Say it at the closing table, out loud.
"My job doesn't end today. Anything comes up with the house, you call me first." Then actually mean it.

2 Build a real after-the-close calendar.
A closing-anniversary note, one practical check-in at tax time, one "how's the house" that asks for nothing.

3 Segment your past clients and give your best ones more contact than a mass email.
Eight to twelve real touches a year, not a drip campaign.

THE TAKEAWAY

HERE'S WHAT YOU DO NOW.

Pick five past clients today and send one message that asks for nothing. Eighty-eight percent already said yes. Go be the agent who's still there when they mean it.
