

KEEPING IT REAL

SHE TELLS BUYERS NOT TO BUY.

A Manhattan team leader on the one habit that gets her both media appearances and repeat clients.

A BUYER WANTED
THE VIEW. SHE SAID DON'T.

Most agents chase the yes. This one will talk a client out of the purchase they came in wanting.

HAVE AN OPINION. ON PURPOSE.

Frances Katzen, a Douglas Elliman team leader in Manhattan, builds her market reports and her media appearances around one habit: a specific, provocative opinion instead of a neutral recap. "Let's have an opinion. And it is provocative," she said on Keeping It Real. "Ooh, that'll get people." The same directness shows up one-on-one. On a buyer set on a view-driven purchase, her advice was blunt: "I just said, don't do it. Why are you doing it? Like don't buy it just for the sake of a view." A neutral report gets skimmed. A stance gets quoted, and remembered as whose stance it was.

WHAT THAT LOOKS LIKE ON YOUR NEXT REPORT:

- 1 Put one real opinion in your next market update, not just the numbers.
"Prices flattened" is a stat. "This is the wrong month to overprice" is a position.
- 2 Say the hard thing to the client in front of you, on the spot.
Katzen's line to a buyer chasing a view: don't buy it just for that.
- 3 Repeat the stance until it's yours.
"Consistency wins the race," Katzen said. "It's just showing up and doing it."

THE TAKEAWAY

A MARKET REPORT
WITH NO OPINION
IN IT IS A STAT
SHEET NOBODY
REMEMBERS WHO SENT.
