7.03 PERCENT. SECOND WEEK CLIMBING.

That's the direction rates actually moved, not the direction most buyer conversations assume.

THE BUYER WAITING FOR RATES TO DROP IS BETTING AGAINST THE LAST TWO WEEKS.

Not a guess. Two straight weekly increases, and the number is now 73 basis points above a year ago.

THE PRINT WENT THE OTHER WAY. TWICE.

Freddie Mac's Primary Mortgage Market Survey, published 2026-09-24, put the 30-year fixed rate at 7.03 percent, up from 6.95 percent the week before, the second straight weekly increase. A year earlier the same survey read 6.30 percent, a full 73 basis points lower. "Rates will probably come down soon" is the line a lot of buyer conversations run on right now. The most recent two weeks of actual data ran the other direction.

WHAT THAT CHANGES IN THE BUYER CONVERSATION THIS MONTH:

- 1 Show the actual weekly print, not a vibe.

Freddie Mac publishes it every Thursday. Two clicks, and it's a stronger answer than "rates should ease up."
- 2 Reframe the question.

Trade "when will rates drop" for "what does the payment look like at today's rate, with today's options." A buydown conversation belongs here, not a waiting game.
- 3 Set a real check-in date, not an open-ended wait.

Pick the following Thursday's release and revisit the number together, so "waiting" has an actual end date instead of drifting.

THE TAKEAWAY

THE MARKET
DIDN'T DO WHAT
THE WAIT-AND-SEE CONVERSATION IS BETTING ON.
NEITHER SHOULD THE PLAN.
