

KALE REALTY

YOUR PRODUCTION NUMBERS ARE A RECRUITING PRODUCT NOW.

A software company is turning your own closed deals into a list recruiters can buy.

“

ONE BROKERAGE JUST ASKED MLSS TO STOP SELLING ITS AGENTS' DATA TO RECRUITERS.

The same feed that shows your production, your closings, and your roster status gets packaged into tools other brokerages use to find you.

ONE BROKERAGE SAID IT OUT LOUD. THE PIPELINE RUNS EVERYWHERE.

Compass sent MLSs a letter the week of September 26, 2026, demanding they stop feeding vendors named in the letter, Courted, Brokerkit, and Brokermetrics, agent-level production numbers, listing history, closed transactions, and roster movements. "The MLS exists to facilitate real estate transactions, not to weaponize our operational data against us for competitor poaching," the letter said. Compass is the first brokerage to put that complaint in writing, and the pipeline it describes runs on every MLS an agent reports to, not only Compass's. The number that ends up in a recruiting product is not Compass's. It is the individual agent's own closed deals.

CHECK YOUR OWN EXPOSURE BEFORE A RECRUITER DOES:

- 1 Ask your MLS which vendors it licenses agent-level data to, by name.

For Chicago agents, that's a direct question to MRED, not a guess.

- 2 Look yourself up in a recruiting-tool free trial first.

Most of these platforms let anyone create an account and search a name.

- 3 Decide what a recruiter would see about you before the call comes, not during it.

Know your own numbers cold.

THE TAKEAWAY

THE DATA A RECRUITER WOULD USE TO FIND YOU
ALREADY EXISTS.
THE ONLY QUESTION IS WHETHER YOU
LOOKED FIRST.
