

D.J. PARIS

STILL ACTIVE THREE WEEKS AFTER IT SOLD.

That listing isn't being marketed anymore. It's being used to farm your leads.

THE HOUSE IS SOLD. THE LISTING
ISN'T.

Buyers still call on homes that already have a contract, because nobody changed the status.

CHICAGO'S MLS GIVES YOU 48 HOURS TO CHANGE IT. SOME AGENTS LET IT RIDE FOR WEEKS.

MRED, the Chicago area's MLS, requires an agent to change a listing's status within 48 hours of the triggering event, weekends and holidays included, and a late change carries a 250 dollar fine. Some agents leave a listing marked Active for weeks after it goes under contract anyway. Every buyer call on that "available" listing goes to the agent who left it stale, on a house they can't sell. The seller's own listing becomes the agent's lead machine.

WHAT THAT MEANS FOR YOUR OWN LISTINGS:

- 1 Change the status the day the contract is signed, not the day you remember.
Put your MLS deadline on the calendar the moment you get a signature, not on a mental to-do list.
- 2 Capture the lead honestly instead.
Tell the caller, "That one's under contract, but here are three like it," and actually have three ready to show.
- 3 Check your own board's days-on-market data before you price off it.
A stale status feeds bad comps to every agent pricing nearby, including you.

THE TAKEAWAY

ISN'T MARKETING.
IT'S USING THE SELLER'S HOME TO GENERATE YOUR NEXT LEAD.
