Most agents price the listing and never ask what else is on the table.

THE EQUITY IS REAL. THE SYSTEM BUILT TO USE IT IS NOT.

Home equity held by homeowners age sixty-two and older climbed to a record $14.66 trillion in the third quarter of 2025, up nearly two percent from the prior quarter, according to the NRMLA/RiskSpan Reverse Mortgage Market Index. Most of that wealth sits behind a mortgage system built around a paycheck, and retirement income does not fit that shape. A seller who looks "equity rich, income light" on paper is often just a seller the standard underwriting model was not built to read.

BRING THIS INTO YOUR NEXT CONVERSATION WITH A SELLER SIXTY-TWO OR OLDER:

- 1 Ask what they've already looked into.

A straight sale is one option among several. Some sellers have priced downsizing against a reverse mortgage or a HELOC and never said so out loud.
- 2 Name the equity, specifically.

"Homeowners your age are holding a record amount of home equity right now" opens a different conversation than "are you ready to list?"
- 3 Bring a lender who reads retirement income.

Standard debt-to-income underwriting often misreads Social Security, pensions, and investment draws. A referral to a lender fluent in that gap keeps you useful even if the client's best move is not a sale at all.

THE TAKEAWAY

THE WEALTH IS ALREADY SITTING
IN THE HOUSE. ASK
WHAT THEY WANT TO DO WITH IT.

This week, ask your next sixty-two-plus seller what they've considered besides listing.
