A BUYER SCROLLS PAST MORE LISTINGS THAN THEY WILL EVER WALK THROUGH.

The first photo decides which pile this one lands in.

THE PHOTO IS THE FIRST SHOWING, AND MOST AGENTS SKIP IT.

A phone shot at 4pm with the blinds half closed tells a buyer this agent didn't bother, before anyone reads a word of the listing. The seller's largest asset gets the same five minutes as a group text: a crooked vertical, a flash bounced off the TV, the agent caught in the bathroom mirror. The fix isn't a bigger budget. It's a standard the agent holds to on every listing, at every price point, with no exceptions for "it's just a starter home."

THE STANDARD, EVERY LISTING, NO EXCEPTIONS:

1 Shoot in daylight, every lamp on.
Never the flash-bounced evening shot.

2 Straighten the verticals.
A leaning doorframe reads as a leaning house.

3 Lead with the kitchen or the strongest exterior.
Not the hallway, not the bathroom.

4 Shoot wide, 25 images minimum.
Eight photos tells a buyer there wasn't much to show.

THE TAKEAWAY

YOUR CLIENT TRUSTED YOU WITH THEIR LARGEST ASSET.

The listing photos are the pitch before the showing. Light it like one.
